Counselling service for mothers and fathers / Health visiting service

Counselling service for mothers and fathers / Health visiting service

The counselling service for mothers and fathers also called the health visiting service contributes to health promotion and prevention.

The service provides advisory services for all parents and caregivers of infants and young children.

The services we provide

- telephone consultation
- home visits by prior arrangement
- advice at open counselling sessions held in the community by appointment

The service provides help and support on the following subjects: nutrition, child development, caring for and bringing up children as well as psychosocial issues.

For whom

The counselling service for mothers and fathers or health visiting service is available to all parents with babies or young children. Provided the parents give their permission, the first contact will be made when a mother leaves hospital with her baby.

Costs

Parents can take advantage of the service free of charge.
