Multisystemic counseling

Multisystemic counseling

Multisystemic counseling focuses on families – viewed as a unit – as well as on individuals, i.e., parents, children, adolescents, and couples. We particularly focus on children and adolescents and maintain channels for them to contact us directly without having to go through their parents or schools. Our counseling range covers a variety of social, psychological, family, educational, and professional issues.

A multisystemic approach means that we include the social systems relevant to the individual or to the family. This allows us to pursue a preventive approach where challenges may arise, or to provide care when challenges have already occurred. We consider the current level of knowledge of those affected in order to meet their individual needs.

Our counseling approach

We rely on effective and efficient support and coordination during the collaboration. We work in alignment with the resources available to the respective individual. Interdisciplinarity, i.e., the cooperation between different disciplines, ensures customized and professional counseling in a quick and target-oriented manner.

Target groups

We offer counseling on a vast range of subjects to avoid the risk of people falling through the “cracks” with their own life issues. Find a non-exhaustive list of subjects below.

Target group families

- Strengthening parenthood in various subjects
- Strengthening parenthood among immigrant parents (family, everyday life, and school issues)
- Challenging situations in the couple relationship related to parenthood
- Counseling for families as a whole or for their individuals – parents, children, adolescents, couples
- Crisis support in cases of deterioration during the counseling process – grief, life crises, development crises, overload, burn-out of professionals, or similar issues

Target group adolescents

- Strengthening in identity/development/sexuality and peer matters
- Strengthening financial skills
- Building bridges between parents/school/apprenticeship company
- Supporting care leavers during their transition to independent lives
